Investment strategy

SKAGEN m2 provides exposure to a normally difficult to access global real estate market. The fund selects low-priced, high-quality real estate companies from around the world. The fund is suitable for those with at least a five year investment horizon. Subscriptions are made in fund units and not directly in stocks or other securities. The benchmark reflects the fund's investment mandate. Since the fund is actively managed, the portfolio will deviate from the composition of the benchmark.

Monthly commentary, August 2025

Global real estate performed in line with broader equity markets in August but continues to lag year-to-date. This underperformance persists despite clear signs of recovery in capital market activity, a positive trajectory in property values, and solid operational performance reflected in the remainder of the 1H25 earnings season.

Investor sentiment remains weighed down by macroeconomic concerns. Elevated bond yields and a muted market reaction to ongoing US trade negotiations set against a backdrop of geopolitical uncertainty continue to pressure the sector. A key source of investor hesitation is uncertainty around the inflationary impact of recent tariff developments.

In August, the Bank of England cut interest rates despite a slight uptick in inflation, while Sweden's Riksbank held rates steady. In the US, the market continues to price in multiple rate cuts during the second half of 2025. This downward trend in interest rates should, over time, lower financing costs for real estate companies, though the effects are lagged due to previously elevated levels. As construction activity remains subdued due to higher borrowing costs and economic challenges, supply constraints are emerging across several real estate segments. This benefits existing assets, particularly as the market shifts into a recovery phase.

The best-performing stock in August was UK-listed tower operator Helios Towers with assets primarily located in Africa. Following a strong earnings report in late July highlighting robust growth and deleveraging, the stock was positively re-rated, supported further by the BoE's rate cut. Japanese developers continue to be among the top-performing subsectors globally this year, driven by strong condominium sales and high office occupancy. Portfolio holding Tokyu Fudosan delivered solid performance in August, benefiting from sustained housing demand and related services. Conversely, French housebuilder Nexity was the weakest performer. Political turmoil in France, including a vote of confidence in the government, weighed on the stock. Additionally, its interest rate sensitivity left it vulnerable to broader market sentiment.

Listed real estate continues to deliver robust cash flows, with several indicators suggesting the sector is moving in the right direction. The sector is currently trading below its long-term average NAV discount and offers an attractive dividend yield above historical averages. Sentiment is gradually improving, and the global interest rate environment remains supportive in many regions. Looking ahead, we maintain our focus on resilient companies operating in trend-driven subsegments that are undervalued but well-positioned to perform across market cycles. These typically have strong balance sheets, which is an increasingly important feature as the sector's financials continue to improve. The portfolio remains strategically overweight in high-growth segments such as digital real estate, social infrastructure, housing, and logistics/warehousing – areas set to benefit from structural demand trends and a shifting yield curve. Real estate remains the world's largest asset class – and with favourable dynamics unfolding, we believe it deserves renewed investor attention. Don't overlook the opportunities it presents.
